Something familiar about twins' performance

By Brie Iatarola

Barbra Streisand, Elton John, Cher, Neil Diamond and Rod

Stewart all have one thing in common: People like to impersonate them. While many fail miserably, there are a select few, including California-born identical twin brothers Anthony and Eddie Edwards, who have become famous in their own right by portraying legendary celebrities so well.

On Dec. 30, Anthony and Eddie -- aka The Edwards Twins -- will copycat some of the world's most famous icons in their performance, "Celebrities on Stage," at Stephen & Mary Birch North Park Theatre. With more than 100 superstars in the twins' repertoire of impressions, audience members are bound to do a few double-takes.

Advance tickets are available online at www.e-ticketsnow.com or by calling the box office at (619) 239-8836. The Birch North Park Theatre is located at 2891 University Ave. For more information on The Edwards Twins, visit their Web site at www.edwardstwins.com.

Back when life was simple, no one cared about how much sugar was in Kool-Aid or whether Wonder Bread contained gluten. Though times have changed, "Seinfeld" writer Pat Hazell hasn't forgotten about those good ol' days, recalling everything that made them special in his one-man show, "The Wonder Bread Years," playing until Dec. 31 at the Theatre in Old Town, 4040 Twiggs St. Tickets can be purchased online at www.miracletheatreproductions.com or by phone at (619) 688-2494. Visit www.theatreinoldtown for more details.
